

Last weekend I went to Mitsuta High School's culture festival. Schools in the United States usually don't have any events like this, so it was a completely new experience for me. I've heard about cultural festivals before, but this was my first time being part of one.

There were so many things to see and do. I enjoyed the performances early in the day. I was impressed by all talent that the students have! My favorite performance was probably the concert band. It brought back memories from when I was a high school student. I was also impressed by the amount of food available. Unfortunately, I didn't realize how quickly tickets sold out, so I was only able to try one thing. Now I know to get in line early, so I will try to have more things next year. The culture festival gave me a good opportunity to talk to some of the students at Mitsuta. I think they were more relaxed speaking with me since we weren't in a classroom. I think I got to know the students a bit better.

I'm glad that I was able to take part of Mitsuta's culture festival, especially since this is a special year for the school. The students and the staff have made me feel so welcome, and I'm glad that I can be involved with activities outside of class. I'm looking forward to getting to know the students and teachers even better.
